Berry Crops Damaged.

Drouth Has Greatly Reduced the Supply This Year.

Not only has the continued drouth injured the berry crop of the State of Maine to the extent of from 30 to 50 per cent, but it is extending to the apple and berry crop to an alarming extent and withered apples and berries are falling from the trees and bushes in consequence of the long spell of dry weather.

The strawberry season is practically over and none have been seen for some time. A fruit dealer who is in touch with the berry market at all times said that the crop of strawberries has certainly been damaged to the extent of 30 per cent. It is hard to correctly estimate the damage but all who are connected with the strawberry business agree that it has been damaged fully one-third and the greater part of the dealers say that one-half is nearer the correct figure.

Many of the housewives who have waited for strawberries to reach a low figure so that they might be preserved economically have been disappointed. Other years people have been able to buy strawberries at prices around six and seven cents a box at wholesale, but this year ten cents has been the lowest price reached. Those who have waited are doomed to disappointment and with the shortage of fruit and berries many people are preserving peaches and other fruit not native to Maine, of which there is plenty in the market.

The situation in the blueberry districts just at present looks serious and unless there is rain soon and plenty of it there will be a great loss to the blueberry pickers. The hot weather has blighted and withered the berries to a great extent. The pickers are hoping for rain in order to save the crop. The blueberries on the high lands are already damaged to a large extent and those on the plains and bogs show the effect of the dry weather.

Raspberries and blackberries are also affected and the crop will be light everywhere.

All berries must have rain and without it wither and blight will surely do much damage. The long continued dry weather has affected all alike and consequently there will be a high price for all kinds of berries this season and a lack of preserves on the shelves for winter use.

THE BARROW AT THE FRONT.

The barrow is coming into his own. Costly experience with swine disease, contracted at public market exhibitions, despite all possible precautions, induced the management of the international show to abandon classes for breeding swine and open a show for barrows only, that go direct from pens to the shambles. This idea did not suit some swine breeders. But the barrow show has caught the swing of success and will hereafter receive the support of some interests which have been fighting it. It has demonstrated the possibilities of such a show, and those who came to scoff will remain to pray—and exhibit. The perfection to which pork producing can be brought, mirrored in the exhibits of this section, is among the most absorbing features of this exhibition.

Hampshires Popular.
As heretofore, keen interest was shown in the exhibit of Hampshire barrows. Black hogs with white belts around their bodies at the white appeal to the curious as well as to pork makers. They are old, distinctive and flash in the show yard.

But it is not alone the peculiar color marking of Hampshires that accounts for their growing popularity. Packers esteem them for their dressing qualities. This fact has been emphasized in the decisions registered by packing house judges of fat barrows at this show. Each year has marked an increase in the number.

R. L. Bollman of Illinois was first for barrow under six months, the Ohio State university second and Atkinson & Stone, Illinois, third. It was a beautiful trio which took the prizes in this class. A deal of finish and quality was associated with rather heavy bone and coarseness of head. Hampshires made an especially strong pen showing. Grade and cross bred fat barrows made an exceptionally strong exhibit. That certain breeds cross to excellent advantage from the feeder's standpoint was a patent fact in this collection.

Grand Championships.

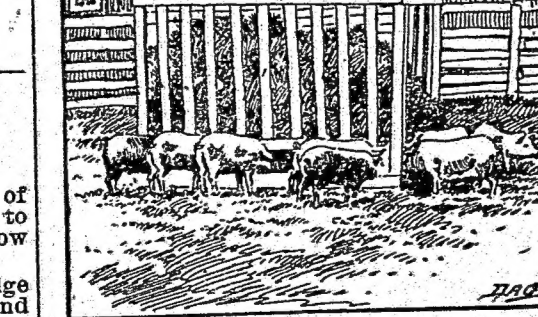

The Ohio State university won the grand championship for pen of three barrows. Competition was as edged as a half dozen top notch rival pens could make it. It was the trio of pure bred Berkshires, all bred and fed by that institution, which achieved this distinguished honor. The grand championship single barrow was the mixed bred hog shown by Goodwine & Goodenough.

In breeding the grand champion barrow, from a litter of seven pigs, is three-fourths Duroc-Jersey, one-eighth Poland-China and one-eighth Hampshire. He was wonderfully made and wonderfully fed.

These interesting items and illustrations of a fine feature of the last international show are reproduced by the courtesy of the Breeder's Gazette, Chicago.

Hog Feed Rack.

The illustration herewith shows a form of rack which was designed and first used by A. M. Davis of Michigan for feeding alfalfa to hogs which are following corn fed cattle. It has been highly indorsed by Professor H. R. Smith of the Nebraska experiment station.

FEEDING ALFALFA TO HOGS.

In some humid sections it might be well to construct a cover of some kind to go over the top of it. The rack may be of any length, but it should be more than three or three and one-half feet wide, as the alfalfa would probably lodge in the center. The fencing board at the bottom should not be more than nine inches from the top to the ground. If higher the hogs will be likely to get their fore feet into the rack. The 2 by 4 at the bottom of the hopper should be six inches from outside line of the corner posts and at the bottom fourteen inches from the floor of the rack or eighteen inches from the ground.—Breeder's Gazette, Chicago.

Stable Disinfectant.

Whitewash is one of the cheapest disinfectants and can be easily and rapidly applied with a spray pump. It must be carefully strained before using in the pump, as any lumps will clog the spray nozzle.

The way of the transgressor may be hard, but there is some consolation in the fact that it is never lonesome.

Talked Shop.

"Do the Sonsbays live here?" asked the timid man who had just knocked. "No, on the door above."

"Ah," said the timid one, who was a literary gent, picking up his grip and preparing to climb, "that is another story."

Kind to Measure By.

"I remember the general when he wasn't more than knee high to a grasshopper."

"Impossible."

"But I do."

"Must have been one of them grasshoppers Uncle Bill seen out west. Near as I can get at it, they was as big as Newfoundland dogs."

An Unwelcome Guest.

About this season of the year a little germ comes snooping round. Not bigger than a pauper's board, but able quite to hold its ground. The naughty, husky sort of it. It meets and gets him on the hip; it gnaws into the inner man, and then a fellow has the grip.

He may be walking down the street, without a care upon his mind. When, uttering no warning shout, the little germ comes up behind. He does not know he is attacked. Because the tiny germ is sly. But when he opens up his mouth it goes inside to multiply.

Next morning as he starts to rise he gets a sort of wireless hint. That something's wrong in his inside. And says some things not fit to print. His head seems made of solid lead. He has the toothache in his bones, and as he tries to lumber up. The neighborhood can hear his groans.

It dallies with him through the day; it doesn't kill him on the spot. But some of burns him at the stake. To add heart interest to the plot. A boiler works in his head; it feeds the driver's wheel; His bones are broken on the wheel, and then he knows he has the grip.

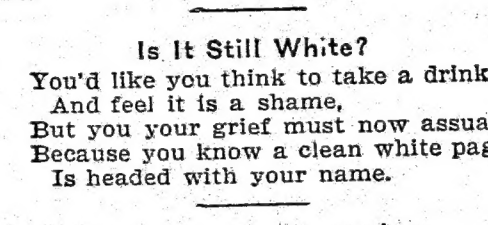

Politeneers a Check.

"What is it they call these burnt wood decorations?" "I don't know the name for it." "But it is a common word." "I would tell you what I call it only for the fact that there are ladies present."

Is It Still White?

You'd like you think to take a drink and feel it is a shame. But you your grip must now assuage. Because you know a clean white page is headed with your name.

Something to Remember.

"This has been a memorable year for me."

"Why, did you take a bath?"

Practicing Economy.

"I was just on the point of calling him a liar, but I restrained myself."

"Funeral expenses are mighty high now, aren't they?"

Lesser Catch.

Without permission he went fishing and found that it was pleasant sailing. And, though he didn't catch a whale, when he got home he caught a whaling.

Changes Have Been Ordered.

Adj. Gen. A. B. Farnham has issued orders for the change of the uniform of the National Guard of the State to conform to like changes in the uniform regulations for the U. S. Army. All officers will wear a band of brown braid one-half inch wide on the sleeves of the service coat, the lower edge of the braid three inches from the end of the sleeves. Officers on mounted duty white gloves. On the dress uniform collar of cotton, wool or leather. The collar of the dress, service and white coats, placed at one inch from the end of the collar, a suitable space to be left between the letters. On the dress and white coats the letters will be of gold or gilt metal. On the service coat they will be of dull finish bronze metal for all officers.

Old Soldiers Meet.

The regimental reunions are soon to occur, the officers of the various associations being engaged at the present time in making the arrangements. The 14th Maine Regiment will have its 23d reunion at the cottage on Long Island. The business session will occur, Wednesday, Aug. 5, but many of the veterans will be at the cottage for the week.

The annual reunion of the survivors of the 20th Maine Regiment will be at Thomaston, Me., 27. Monday evening, July 20, in Bosworth Post Hall on Free street, at 8 o'clock, the local members of the 17th Maine Regiment Association will have a meeting for the purpose of deciding on the place for holding the annual reunion which takes place Aug. 18, in the vicinity of Portland.

It is cheerfully predicted that the real revival of prosperity will be in 1910 and 1911. It does not say what will happen in the mean time. Let us hope the worst has been.

Mary Sigbee Ker is the artist who made the interesting cover for the August American Magazine entitled "Extraneous of Fashion." She is a daughter of Commander Sigbee, who was in charge of the battleship Maine when it was blown up in 1898. Both she and her husband, Balfour Ker, are artists. The cover for the August American Magazine made such a hit among dealers, who saw it in advance of publication, that it has been decided to bring it out as a separate picture.

In every line of business there is one "Best" product. You know the name of the best piano, the best silverware, the best hat--and druggists all know that Nyal's are the best remedies.

The New York and London Drug Co. who make them are an old and conservative house, who make their goods absolutely right, keeping them at the highest standard of quality.

They allow them to be sold only in the best stores; they do not allow any exaggerated or untrue advertising of Nyal's Family Remedies to be done.

They place the formulas in our possession so that we can know exactly what we are selling.

It is the right way to do business and we are proud to have Nyal's Family Remedies in our store for it is true all over the country that "Every Nyal store is a good store."

The K. of P. Ball Game.
A ball team from Pennessawasee lodge, K. of P., South Paris crossed bats at the Fair grounds, Saturday afternoon, the South Paris team winning by the score of 19 to 4. There was quite a crowd of spectators who watched the game with interest, though it got a little monotonous with South Paris so far in the lead. But the general remark was "it's played for the fun of it" and fun there was in abundance, with errors abounding everywhere. It was evident that South Paris had more men that had practiced more or less. A collection was taken and enough received to meet the expenses of the afternoon. The line up of the teams:

Col. A. M. Dunham took his snow shoes that he had made for the Peary expedition to be used on his trip to the North Pole to him at Portland about three weeks ago, and Norway people hope that the man at one time a resident of Oxford county, will have his pair of Norway made shoes (the best in the world) on his feet when he steps for the first time on the North Pole. Col. Dunham is showing to his friends a walrus skull with tusks and a narwhal horn two feet long that were presented to him by Peary as souvenirs of the far northern country. The narwhal horn is by no means a large specimen, some of them being twice or three longer and bigger, but it is a curiosity in this climate. It grows on the left side of the nostril and is not only used by the narwhal as a weapon of defense, but is used to stir up its food from the bottom of the ocean.

"The Magic Lure."

Since the advertisement of the "Magic Fish Lure" appeared in the Advertiser of July 10, lots of the fishermen have tried it. It has had a big sale and plug fishing abounds. Saturday afternoon we counted eight boats of fishermen over a small area of Lake Pennessawasee and all presumably with hooks loaded with Magic Lure.

"Will it catch fish?" you ask. We can only tell you a story we heard. That good fisherman John A. Woodman and Warren Bartlett bought two bottles at 25 cents each and went up the lake. The waves ran high as they reached the fishing grounds, for a stiff breeze was on. Somehow in managing the boat one bottle spilled in the bottom of the boat. The fish began to close in on them. Mr. Woodman seized the oars and struck out for the shore. Mr. Bartlett piled a club and with lively work they reached shoal water before the boat was swamped.

Two more good sized trout were taken from the lake Friday, "plug" fishing. W. A. Bicknell got one weighing 4 1/2 pounds and Oscar Needham, 3 pounds.

Stickpatch is the new way to mend stockings and George A. Morse is selling it right here in Norway. There will be no more need of traveling around with holes in your stockings.

Mrs. Cummings much admired the horse and wanted to buy it last summer, and got the refusal of it when it was sold. The horse was brought to Norway Saturday, by the Harrison stage driver, Frank Eastman.

These are the notices that have been posted at Lake Pennessawasee: "Length of fish which may be caught: Length of trout, 5 inches; landlocked salmon, 12 inches; black bass, 10 inches; white perch, 6 inches. Penalty not less than $10 nor more than $30 for each offense and $1.00 for each fish. Pub. Laws 1907, ch. 181, and sec. 48, ch. 32."

Don't Rock the Boat.

The following article was taken from a pamphlet called "Sagebrush Philosophy":—

Since early in the season the cheerful idiot who rocks the boat has been busy, and more than one hearse has held his handiwork. Singularly enough, he himself can seldom swim, and, in fact, there is some satisfaction in the thought that when the inevitable happens and the bodies of his victims are finally recovered, it is reasonably safe to assume that he won't do it again unless lakes and streams are so high that the unsuspected feature of the scenic attractions of his new location.

More people are given to rocking the boat than he, however. It is a popular pastime and is indulged in by all of us in some degree of damfoolness, from the cradle to the grave. The average man will confess that he didn't wait until he shed Fauntleroy trousers ere he began to rock the boat just a little in recognition of his coming majority—and this is not altogether correct. From desire, about the time she bids her dolls goodbye, to teeter her light craft just a little bit and watch the waves.

Some keep well within the gunwale limit—others persist until they get a good ducking, and some, who are often cured—and many there are who suddenly find themselves in deep water and are unable to reach shore. There are life saving crews and life-line in plenty—to say nothing of well understood cautions and danger signals which are designed to protect a fool from his folly. Many are warned in time and many are rescued and many perish miserably.

Fires in Woods.

How Mountain Watchers Spy Them Out.

A man on the roof of a log cabin on the top of a mountain surveys the region for miles around with a telescope. He sees a thin trail of smoke on the eastern horizon. A range finder is brought to bear upon the smoke. The finder reads 259 degrees. A glance at the chart tells him what part of the country 259 degrees means. He jumps to the telephone.

"Hello, fire on the southeast side of 10-acre lot. Heavy smoke appearing now. Looks like a bad fire," he shouts. He has hardly finished speaking before the fire warden of the district with whom he conversed is on his way to the fire with men and shovels and axes to put out the fire and prevent it from destroying any more of Maine's valuable timber lands.

Thus Maine is employing watch towers as did the cities of old to discover the dreaded enemy before the country is devastated and the inhabitants besieged. An elaborate system of lookout stations now in operation under the supervision of the Maine forest guards, is preventing disaster to Maine forests from cigar stubs, smoldering camp fires or other remnants of hunters and outing parties, firearms, sparks from railroad trains, etc.

There are already eight watch towers and the state is planning for more. They are situated on the topmost points of land in Washington, Somerset, Piscataquis, Aroostook, Penobscot, Hancock, Franklin and Oxford counties.

Attendants at each station are in telephone communication with thousands of acres of timber land.

At the watch tower on Attenu mountain there is a view of 200,000 acres of forest lands.

Mount Bigelow overlooks 200,000 acres of timberland farming country.

At Whitecap mountain a station in the Keenebec and Penobscot watershed, 300,000 acres are under surveillance.

The Squaw mountain station at the southern end of Moosehead lake is 4,000 feet above the sea level.

The watch towers are square cabins of logs averaging in cost and equipment about $750 each. Each is fitted with telephone, telescope, a chart of the surrounding country and a range finder, an instrument such as is used in the army and navy for fixing distances and direction. The telephone lines connect the stations with settlements. There the fire wardens now have hundreds of men, many of them volunteers at their beck and call when an incipient fire is reported. Observations are made by the watch tower operators every hour and a careful record is kept.

At the Squaw mountain station between 30 and 40 fires were discovered in one season. Their consequences were early extinguishing enabled thousands of acres of timber land to be saved. The watchman at this station kept a record of all the fires.

If the wind is slight, the extinguishing of an incipient forest fire is a relatively simple matter. They are beaten with boughs, and earth and sand is shovelled upon them. When a heavy wind makes the smoke and heat almost unendurable, efforts are made to head off and stop the fire by clearing a strip off and some distance ahead of the line of flame. If the ground fire is so strong that there is danger that it may overleap this cleared strip, a fire is made along the inner edge of this cleared strip. It will burn against the wind and meet the big fire. Both will then subside for lack of fuel.

"There's enough variety in our work up here," said one of the watchmen on a lookout station, "to offset any loneliness. There are two of us up here, one relieving the other in watching. We get $2 a day and are supplied with all sorts of provisions and conveniences which are toted on the backs of men from the lumber camps. When we're not on the watch we read and go out hunting."

A Strange Story.

A special to a Boston daily tells of a strange adventure experienced by Freeman Farrar of West Sumner. The story is as follows:—

"Mr. Farrar, who is a prominent citizen and has been in poor health for several years, became nauseated while attempting to eat an apple and was nearly strangled by a foreign substance in his throat."

Forcing his fingers down his throat, he pulled out, it is stated, a snake nearly a foot long. He fainted, and when he recovered found that the reptile had curled about his false teeth, which had fallen to the ground in the struggle. He has now recovered his health and appetite."

In the case of the State v. the J. P. Bass Publishing Company of Bangor, Chief Justice Emery of the Maine Supreme Court has handed down a rescript which, in effect, affirms the constitutionality of the Maine statute prohibiting the advertising of intoxicating liquors in Maine publications. This case has been in the courts for six or seven years and has attracted considerable attention. At the time this advertisement was published a similar contract was urged by the Maine publishers, newspapers, but the other papers preferred to keep well within the law.

Do You Wear a Cigarette Badge.
When you call on an employer to ask for a job, you think he will not notice your hands? If he looks at the tips of your first and second fingers, will he see the two yellow spots that denote the owner is addicted to the cigarette habit? Will he notice it? Of course he will.

When you face the man who employs the help needed in a big plant, he is apt to look you straight in the eye and ask, "Do you smoke cigarettes?"

That has become one of the leading questions when a man seeks employment. Why has this come to pass? The reason is asked because employers do not desire to have that kind of a man around, as experience with them in the past has been a sad one. Should you hesitate in answering, one glance will give him the required answer—it may bar you from a good opening.

This cigarette badge, once worn, is hard to efface. When his mother looks at it, he wishes that his fingers were free from the stain and sometimes the pang of regret comes when the employer discovers it. He can see an instant change in the man who hires, then he hears the verdict:

"No, we do not need you, young man!"

Now, young man, don't you think that you would feel more self-respect if you got rid of the cigarette badge? You can, if you are ambitious to succeed in the world. It may take lots of will power but if you set to work in earnest and give up the cigarettes, the telltale stains will wear away. You can take it off just as you put it on. Why not begin the fight in earnest, and delay and get rid of the cigarette badge?

Ed. Grant's Dream.

As far as Golden Gate and is Barred Out, see how it would be Ransomer Guides Inside. Peter Hears Tame Trout Tale and Introduces Ed to His Long Lost Brother.

Eddie Grant—there's only one Eddie Grant you know—said he dreamt he died and got as far as the gate which stood somewhat ajar while Peter was making his morning toilet.

"Just got a peep inside," said Eddie to a group of anglers at his camp at Beaver Pond, "when Pete came out, looked at me sort of gentlemanly like 'nd ast me what I wanted."

"Want to get inside the gate, Mr. Peter," I said in my best mannered voice. "What's yer name," sed Peter, "an' where do ye hail from?"

"My name's Ed Grant from Kennebec," and I'm a guide," sed I, "I got 'em durin' the past 30 odd years, a protection of 'em from sin 'nd death. I handed Pete out my tame trout story, 'nd while he was a readin' of it I peeped over his shoulder, 'nd inside I saw several o' my Rangleley guide friends fly 'cassin' with a gold rod 'nd a silver line with a diamond fly into a silvery pool."

"One of 'em waved th' back of his hand at me, a signal I p'pose to back up, 'nd I ast him to 'Kennebec or suthin' of th' sort. 'Twan' no way to use a guide friend, I tho't."

"Peter red that tame trout story through twice, 'nd ast the gate with a bang that echoed like the sounds 'nd ast to hear at Echo lake, and ast me over one side back of a big rock. He looked me over from hed to foot, 'nd ast me if I hed any children or friends on the airth—particularly if I hed any sons like me so he sed he was short o' guides to the infernal regions."

"At the menshun of th' hellish regions I got chills tho' it was a to'ally warm day, 'nd I told Pete that I was tired 'nd would like to get inside o' the golden gate, 'nd he ast me to follow him inside," said Peter quite severely, "they're barred out o' heaven forever."

"But, I sez, eagerly, 'I saw a number of Rangleley guides in there a fishin' just a few minutes ago.'"

"Pete dreyd hisself up to 'bout 10 feet 'nd smiled so that the whole region glowed like there was a big forest fire a goin', 'nd he sed sarkastically, 'Those Rangleley fellers ain't guides. They only think they are,' 'nd ast those that words I didn't care what Pete did with me."

"You come with me, Mister Grant," said Pete, puttin' his arm in mine, 'nd I ast him to introduce you to your long lost brother, who has a camp all by hisself which overlooks all the heavenly regions 'nd who sort o' acts as my private secretary. I found a man a written th' one millionth chapter o' his experiences a fishin' in th' Dead River regions. He had long green whiskers 'nd looked like the pictures o' Rip Van Winkle after his 20 years' rum sleep."

"Why, hello, Ed," sez he, grabbin' my fist, 'how's th' likker holdin' out down Dead River way?"

"I've got th' advantage of me," I sed rather testily like, fer my friend Peter's face soured at the menshun of the word likker, 'nd being a Maine man

"Just then Peter stepped up politely 'nd said, 'Mister Ed Grant, allow me to introduce you to your lost brother who you will help edit this asbestos edition of fish stories.'"

"I didn't ketch the fast name, Peter," I sed kind o' apologizing like.

"Annanias," sez Pete, 'nd he hurried back to the gate."—Maine Woods.

Hats for Midsummer.

Hats are really very, very charming just at this present time. Although rather exaggerated as to size, they blend shades and textures with a marvelous nicety. Hats wingy rather than flowery are plentiful at the milliners' just now.

With a tailored sheening of the severe order there is nothing to be preferred to a studied simplicity in headgear. It is this artistic simplicity that tells.

The Care of Open Wounds.

It is a good thing to remember that nature is an excellent cure for any injury and always endeavors to effect a cure whenever an injury is done to the body. Sometimes nature can, unaided, do all that is necessary to repair the damage done even when the body has been very severely injured, while she fails or seems to fail utterly at times when the injury seems to be very slight indeed.

Let us speak first of the simple cuts that are so common. These may be slight with little bleeding, or deep and long with much bleeding, but we will call them simple cuts if no arteries or large veins are injured, and if the cut has not severed any important structures as the nerves or tendons. In the case of such a simple cut, if the wound be small the bleeding will be unimportant and may be allowed to continue for a few minutes as the free bleeding will help to sweep away any dirt that may be found in or near the cut. If, however, the bleeding does not stop very soon it should be checked by proper means.

And just here it may be well to give a rule for the treatment of all wounds, a rule that is an excellent one for doctors as well as others, a rule given by a distinguished surgeon to his classes of medical students:—Stop all bleeding, make and keep the wound clean, bring the edges of the wound together, and keep them together. Following this rule, if the bleeding does not quickly stop of its own accord, we must try to stop it. A very good thing to do is to allow quite hot water to flow over the wound. This may be hot as to be hard to bear, but the hotter the better so long as we do not scald the patient. This hot water may stop the bleeding, it will certainly tend to make the wound clean, and will also relieve the pain. If the hot water has not stopped the bleeding, try next pressing firmly upon the wound a piece of absolutely clean cotton or linen that has been dipped in hot water. This is practically sure to stop or almost stop the bleeding, although it may be necessary to keep up the pressure some little time.

The next thing to do is to make the wound clean. Now this has been at least partly done if we have used hot water to stop the bleeding, indeed it may be entirely done, particularly if the wound has been made with a sharp knife, so that the edges were clean-cut and not torn. If, however, you want to feel sure that the wound is clean it is a good thing to wash it out with water in which boric acid has been placed, as much as will dissolve in the water. It will be better that this boric acid solution should be hot. If you cannot get boric acid carbolic acid may be used, but this is poisonous and should be used with care, a strength of about three teaspoonful in a pint of water being sufficiently strong. After the wound has been washed out with the carbolic solution it would be well to follow with a washing of water that has just been boiled and cooled. This is to prevent leaving any of the carbolic in the wound.

When the wound has been well washed and is presumably clean, the edges should be brought close together and kept there with strips of adhesive plaster. Then a good bandage should be placed over all, great care being taken that what touches the wound is clean, surgically clean. To make a bandage surgically clean it should be boiled for at least 20 minutes. If no such material is at hand, it will do to take some cotton or linen and scorch it by placing it on the hot stove, then place this next the wound and put on a bandage made from clean material.

If the wound is not clean-cut but is torn and ragged, greater care should be taken with its cleansing. It will do no harm to let such a wound bleed freely for some little time and even to keep it bleeding if it stops soon. Use the hot water or hot solution freely. By means of a syringe (see that the nozzle has been thoroughly cleansed in the solution you are using) probe the wound and thus carry the antiseptic fluid into every part. If the wound is much torn, and particularly if any dirt, as from the ground, has got into it, it will be best not to seal it up as was done with the other wound, but let the dressings be placed upon the open wound in such a way as to bring the edges well together but not to lock any poison in the wound.

If the bleeding is of considerable amount and does not stop readily, but persistently and steadily continues, it is proof that some veins of a fair size have been cut. In such case it may be necessary to apply a tourniquet. This is done by placing a cord about the part that is cut, twisting a stick into the cord and turning the stick until the cord is tight. If a pad is put under the cord a little to one side of the bleeding wound, it will press firmly upon the veins leading to the bleeding point and will stop the flow. It must be remembered that when a vein is bleeding the cord should be placed so as to leave the wound between the heart and the cord, for the blood in a vein is coming toward the heart. If the bleeding from the wound is in spirits, it means that an artery has been cut. In this case the cord and pad should be placed between the wound and the heart. After the bleeding has been checked by the cord and pad for a few minutes the pressure may be released a little to see if the bleeding is going to begin again. If not, the wound may be dressed as in the case of the simpler cut. If the bleeding begins again the pressure of the tourniquet should be again applied. If, after several trials, the bleeding persists, it will be well not to attempt any further treatment but simply keep the pressure up until medical help can be summoned, using just as little pressure as will keep the wound from bleeding, for otherwise other parts of the limb may suffer for lack of blood, or a painful swelling be caused.

Remember the surgeon's rule above and remember well that next to keeping the patient from bleeding to death is to keep the wound clean. A clean wound heals quickly and painlessly, as a rule; an unclean wound may never heal and may poison the whole body, causing even death itself.—Portland Transcript.
